1. Course Description

Within the framework of this course, students acquire a comprehensive understanding of the fundamentals of Political Science, including its subject matter, key concepts, the formation and evolution of political thought, and the core categories of the discipline. The course also covers state and non-state institutions, political systems, processes and regimes, democracy, political elites, and ideologies.

Special emphasis is placed on training specialists who are capable of effectively applying acquired knowledge in practice and critically evaluating events and phenomena occurring in contemporary political processes.

2. Prerequisites

No prerequisites are required for this course.

3. Course Objectives

The objective of this course is to provide students with fundamental political knowledge, to develop their competencies in Political Science, and to ensure a deep understanding of the discipline's categorical apparatus and its practical application. Additionally, the course aims to enhance students' ability to critically assess events and phenomena in contemporary international political processes.

4. Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

- i. Demonstrate a comprehensive understanding of the causes of global changes;
- ii. Understand the essence of politics and recognize its manifestations at national, regional, and global levels;
- iii. Comprehend the role of the state in both domestic and foreign policy;
- iv. Apply well-founded theoretical knowledge in evaluating political events, actors, and opposition behavior;
- v. Utilize general scientific methods such as analysis, synthesis, induction, reasoning, as well as empirical methods including surveys, observation, and document analysis, alongside systematic, comparative, and logical approaches;
- vi. Accurately assess the role of political culture and its components within society.

5. Independent Study and Assignments

I. Independent Study

Independent study is conducted with the aim of deepening students' knowledge of the course and involves the individual study of core and supplementary literature necessary for writing an essay based on pre-selected academic sources.

The main requirements for this form of independent work are as follows:

1. Writing an essay based on the literature assigned for independent study;
2. The assessment criteria include: independence, creativity (analytical approach, development of ideas, originality in problem formulation, and focus on problem-solving), and the validity of proposed arguments;
3. Style and presentation (overall literacy, clarity, and readability of the text);
4. Essay requirements: length – 1200 words ($\pm 10\%$); font – Times New Roman; line spacing – 1.5; font size – 14;
5. Logical coherence and consistency of presentation.

II. Independent Assignments

Students are required to complete five independent assignments in the form of individual tasks within the specified deadlines. These may include: identifying the foundations of political problem research, selecting appropriate methodology, methods, and research techniques based on applied studies, conducting field research, and preparing analytical materials in formats such as video presentations, poster presentations, and others.

1. Course Description

Within the framework of this course, students acquire a comprehensive understanding of the fundamentals of Society and Religion, including its subject matter, key concepts, and the formation and development of religion and society. The course covers the main categories of the discipline, the interrelationship between the state, religion, and society, as well as national and world religions and the theories of society reflected in their sacred sources.

Students also develop an in-depth understanding of the real threats posed to society by religious fanaticism, extremism, radicalism, and terrorism. Particular emphasis is placed on preparing specialists who are capable of effectively applying their knowledge in practice and critically evaluating events and phenomena occurring in a globalized world.

2. Prerequisites

No prerequisites are required for this course.

3. Course Objectives

The primary objective of this course is to examine the role of religion in the social life of society, the history of religions, and social relations, as well as to analyze religion as a social phenomenon. The course explores the types of religions, their origins, historical development, and geographical spread, along with their significance in the development of various spheres of social life.

It also provides comprehensive knowledge about the earliest forms of religion—such as animism, totemism, fetishism, and magic—and their role in primitive societies, as well as national religions and their historical development.

Furthermore, the course facilitates the development of scientific conclusions regarding the concept of society as reflected in the sacred sources of world religions—Christianity, Buddhism, and Islam—and their respective roles within society.

In addition, the course aims to provide students with in-depth knowledge about the material and spiritual threats posed by religious fanaticism, extremism, radicalism, and terrorism.

4. Learning outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Demonstrate a comprehensive understanding of the concepts of society and religion, as well as related theoretical perspectives;
2. Develop a thorough understanding of the specific functions of religion and its role in social life;

3. Objectively and impartially evaluate historical facts and ideas related to society found in ancient national religions and their sacred texts;
4. Analyze issues related to society within the context of world religions and their sacred sources;
5. Develop ideological and moral resilience against harmful ideas such as religious fanaticism, radicalism, extremism, and terrorism through the application of well-founded theoretical knowledge;
6. Apply general scientific methods such as analysis, synthesis, induction, reasoning, as well as empirical methods including surveys and observation, alongside systematic, comparative, and logical approaches.

5. Independent Study and Assignments

I. Independent Study

Independent study is aimed at deepening students' knowledge of the course and involves the individual study of core and supplementary literature required for writing an essay based on pre-selected academic sources.

The main requirements for this form of independent work are as follows:

4. Essay requirements: length – 900 words ($\pm 10\%$); font – Times New Roman; line spacing – 1.5; font size – 14;
5. Logical coherence and consistency of presentation.

II. Independent Assignments

Students are required to complete three independent assignments in the form of individual tasks within the specified deadlines. These include identifying the foundations of a research problem, selecting appropriate methodology, methods, and research techniques based on applied research, and preparing creative materials (e.g., presentations).

All assignments must be submitted on time. Late submissions are not accepted.

1. Course Description

Within the framework of this course, students acquire a comprehensive understanding of the fundamentals of philosophy, including its subject matter, key concepts, the formation and development of philosophical thought, and the core categories of philosophy.

The course examines the role of philosophy in the historical development of society, with particular emphasis on major trends in social, scientific, and technological progress. Instruction is based on the educational triad: knowledge – skills – competencies. Special attention is given to interactive teaching methods and independent learning.

2. Prerequisites

No prerequisites are required for this course.

3. Course Objectives

The primary objective of this course is to provide students with foundational philosophical knowledge, develop their philosophical competencies, and ensure a deep understanding of the categorical apparatus of philosophy.

Additionally, the course is aimed at developing logical and methodological thinking skills, which form the core of philosophical reasoning. Students will gain insight into how philosophy has influenced thought and worldview across different historical periods (as a form of theoretical self-reflection of an era), as well as its impact on science, art, ethics, and politics.

The course also emphasizes the application of acquired knowledge in practice, enabling students to critically evaluate contemporary developments in the world and in Uzbekistan in particular.

4. Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Identify major philosophical schools and their leading representatives, and classify philosophical texts and arguments according to their respective traditions;
2. Understand the influence of philosophy on the resolution of scientific, artistic, ethical, and political issues;
3. Identify the philosophical foundations underlying various scientific, economic, and political ideas;

4. Demonstrate knowledge of the fundamental laws of logic, apply them in discussion and evaluation of texts, and recognize common logical fallacies;
5. Conduct methodological analysis of both theoretical and practical problems;
6. Formulate and justify theoretical and practical hypotheses and propose reasoned solutions;
7. Apply acquired knowledge, skills, and competencies in debates, professional planning, and in addressing scientific, political, and real-life problems;
8. Express ideas and arguments clearly and coherently, both orally and in writing, in a logically and methodologically sound manner.

5. Independent Study and Assignments

Independent study is aimed at deepening students' knowledge of the course and involves the individual study of core and supplementary literature required for writing essays based on selected academic sources.

Independent work includes the following components:

1. preparation for seminars;
2. in-class presentations;
3. essay writing.

The main requirements for this form of independent work are as follows:
