1. Course Description

The course "Sociology and Psychology of Management" examines politics as a sphere of social life and provides an understanding of the socio-economic foundations of politics. It explores the socio-political stratification of social systems, the levels and structure of political consciousness, and the interaction between politics and society.

The course also analyzes the interrelationship between social relations (the social sphere) and political institutions, enabling students to understand the dynamics of their mutual influence.

2. Prerequisites

No prerequisites are required for this course.

3. Course Objectives

The objective of this course is to develop in master's students the ability to scientifically analyze the social and psychological foundations of management processes, as well as the mechanisms of interaction between individuals and groups, and to apply this knowledge in practice.

4. Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of the course, students will:

- Acquire knowledge of sociological and psychological theories of management;
- Learn methods for analyzing relationships between leaders and teams;
- Understand the role of individuals and groups in social processes;
- Gain knowledge of conflict management and communication processes;
- Be able to identify ways to improve the effectiveness of the human factor in management.

5. Independent Study and Assignments

Students are required to complete and submit independent assignments within the specified deadlines. Independent work includes essays, analytical papers, reviews, case studies, and presentations.

All assignments must be uploaded to the JIDU Moodle platform and will be assessed according to established evaluation criteria. Presentations must be delivered in front of the class; however, no separate marks are allocated for the Q&A session.

At the end of the course, students must complete an individual project in the form of a scientific article or a small research study. The topic must be agreed upon and approved by the instructor; otherwise, the maximum score for the assignment will be limited to 20%.

Violations of academic integrity (such as plagiarism or copying) are strictly prohibited.

1. Course Description

In contemporary politics, corporate power refers to the field that serves to foster understanding and goodwill among individuals, organizations, groups of people, or society at large through the dissemination of explanatory materials, information exchange, and assessment of public reactions.

This course enables master's students to accurately understand the essence of today's complex political processes, analyze political developments in society, comprehend the formation of political awareness among the public, and make informed assessments of rapidly changing political events.

2. Prerequisites

There are no prerequisites for this course.

3. Course Objectives

The course aims to develop master's students' competencies in corporate power in contemporary politics, provide a deep understanding of the categorical apparatus of the field, enable its practical application, and cultivate the ability to critically evaluate events and developments occurring in contemporary international political processes.

4. Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Analyze the influence of corporate interests on political processes and make informed decisions.
2. Conduct qualitative and quantitative research, collect and interpret data on corporate power.
3. Evaluate different perspectives and evidence regarding the influence of corporations on politics.
4. Express their ideas clearly and confidently in writing and orally, including public speaking skills.
5. Communicate effectively with various stakeholders, including businesses, governments, and public organizations.
6. Understand the legal aspects of corporate politics, including regulation of lobbying.
7. Address ethical issues related to corporate power and its societal impact.
8. Develop strategies for operating in environments shaped by corporate influence on politics.
9. Integrate knowledge from various fields (economics, sociology, political science) to better understand the topic.

10. Plan and implement projects related to the study of corporate power and its political influence.

5. Independent Study and Assignments

I. Independent work is aimed at deepening the student's knowledge of this subject and involves individual study of primary and supplementary literature to write an essay.

The main requirements for this type of assignment are:

1. Writing an essay based on the literature provided for independent study;
2. Evaluation criteria: independence, creativity (analytical approach, idea formation, novelty of problem definition, focus on problem-solving), and validity of proposed arguments;
3. Style (overall literacy, clarity of the text);
4. Essay format: 1200 words ($\pm 10\%$), Times New Roman, 1.5 line spacing, font size 14;
5. Consistency of presentation.

II. Students must complete five independent assignments individually by the deadline, which may include: identifying the foundations of a political problem, selecting methodology, methods, and research tools based on practical research, event analysis, content analysis, systematic analysis, field research, preparing analytical materials, and presenting them via video or poster presentations.

All assignments must be submitted on time. Late submissions are not permitted.

1. Course Description

This lecture course is designed to familiarize students with the main theoretical concepts and processes in the field of system analysis and managerial decision-making, with a particular focus on social and humanitarian approaches. Students will explore systems as social constructs at macro, meso, and micro levels, and examine the factors influencing decision-making processes within societies, organizations, communities, and individual actors.

The course covers classical and contemporary sociological theories, behavioral economics, network analysis, artificial intelligence, and digital spaces, including virtual worlds and online platforms. It emphasizes understanding how decisions are shaped by social structures, cultural norms, individual motivations, and technological factors. By the end of the course, students will be able to analyze complex social systems and make informed managerial decisions in dynamic and uncertain contexts.

2.Pre-requisites

Prerequisites for this discipline are not required.

3. Purpose of the course

The course aims to provide students with theoretical and practical skills to understand and analyze social systems and the processes of managerial decision-making at multiple levels. Students will develop the ability to evaluate the impact of social, cultural, organizational, and technological factors on decision-making, and to formulate strategic, tactical, and adaptive recommendations for effective management.

4.Learning outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, students should be able to:

1. Understand the concept of system analysis and systems as social constructs.
2. Analyze systems at macro (societies, states, civilizations), meso (organizations, networks, communities), and micro (individuals, small groups) levels.
3. Apply classical and contemporary sociological theories to understand decision-making processes.
4. Assess the impact of culture, norms, ideology, and social structures on managerial decisions.
5. Recognize the role of behavioral economics and cognitive biases in individual and group decision-making.
6. Understand the applications and limitations of artificial intelligence in system analysis and decision-making.
7. Analyze virtual and digital spaces as social systems using concepts such as rhizomes, assemblages, actor-network theory, and flat ontologies.
8. Apply system analysis methods to real-world managerial challenges at different organizational and societal levels.

9. Evaluate ethical, social, and technological implications of decisions in digital and physical environments.

10. Develop strategic recommendations and adaptive solutions for managerial and organizational decision-making

5. Independent learning and tasks

Independent work is carried out in order to deepen the knowledge of students in this subject and involves the individual study of additional literature selected in advance. Forms and types of independent work for students, the main requirements for them are defined in clause 9.

The student is required to submit (upload to the electronic system) the assignments given as 5 independent works within the specified time. Missed assignments will not be resubmitted.
